

Kevin Klowden

Kevin Klowden is a managing economist at the Milken Institute, where he serves as director of the California Center. He specializes in the study of demographic and spatial factors (the distribution of resources, business locations, and labor), how these are influenced by public policy, and how they in turn affect regional economies. Klowden has addressed the role of technology-based development in publications such as “North America’s High-Tech Economy,” and location-specific studies on Arkansas and Arizona. In addition, he oversaw the yearlong Los Angeles Economy project, which examined key workforce and economic development issues in Los Angeles. Klowden was the lead author of “Film Flight: Lost Production and Its Economic Impact in California” and “The Writers’ Strike of 2007–2008: The Economic Impact of Digital Distribution,” both of which analyze the changing dynamics of the entertainment industry. He has also written on the role of transportation infrastructure in economic growth and job creation in reports such as “California’s Highway Infrastructure: Traffic’s Looming Cost” and “Jobs for America: Investments and Policies for Economic Growth and Competitiveness,” as well as in several publications including The Wall Street Journal. Klowden earned an M.A. in economic geography from the University of Chicago and an M.S. in politics of the world economy from the London School of Economics.